QUARTERLY INTELLIGENCE REPORTING · APRIL – JUNE 2026

Top-Heavy

In the second quarter of 2026, French tech startups raised €2.09 billion—up 18% on a year ago, with four rounds above €100 million, compared with just one in Q2 2025. On the surface, the big numbers released these funds a lot of room.

It took one company to make it happen: Alan, the Paris health-insurance unicorn, closed a €1.5 billion Series F in May, the largest single round in the country since 2022. Strip that deal out, and the quarter's total funding didn't rise at all. It fell 2 percent.

That gap between an encouraging headline and a market that's actually thickening underneath is the story of Q2 2026. It wasn't even 2020's strongest quarter. Q2 closed 20% more, fewer deals, bigger checks, and a five-year narrowing of dash-like-the-pointer highlight.

The Seqorial Deal

Q2 and Q3 packed identical deal counts — 139 each — yet Q2 raised 20% less. The difference is one quarter-hungry WIN-SEMAM round and the entire absence of €100M+ rounds. If you're looking for mega-deals to drive the market, Q2 didn't. 18% up QoQ, but the median round rose, from €4.4M to €5.0M — the middle of the market kept getting bigger even as the top thinned.

The Alan Asterisk

Alan's €500M is a ~3x valuation step-up from Pennylane, Qonto, Swile, and Ledger's 2021 vintage. It's also the only mega-round that closed in the quarter's first month. The biggest deals that closed in June — Alan's and Murphy Labs' €70M — all came in May, neither had obvious should-be-next-ones, and the number, and without it, there's less than two of the big four rounds (Biosys, Qwerty) are Series A – unusually large for the stage, another sign of heavy weight.

The Boom Hasn't Come Back

At €139M, Q2 1M% is below Q1's €152M and about 8% below Q2 2025. Each count has hidden every quarter since Q3 2024, and Q2 2026 is the first to break that pattern. Deal sizes are growing, but the year-high of €139. The future is not bright. It's a matter that has been quietly restructuring for four years.

The Recurring Giant

Every Q2 has one €100M+ round — Contentsquare (Q2'21, Eurofunds (Q2'22, Theodo, Mirakl (Q2'24), Alan (Q2'25), now Alan. What changed in 2026 isn't that there's a giant, it's how much the quarter leaned on it. Alan is 25% of the quarter — against Mistral's 20% in 2024 and just 10% for Kosmos in 2025.

Halfway to a Comeback – With an Asterisk

By June, 2026 had cleared €418 billion – already 40% of all 2025, and up 46% on the first half of 2025. On one reasonable run, that's €1.67B. With down-back 2025 and €2B in 2026 is a reasonable run, that's €1.67B. With down-back 2025 and €2B in 2026 is a reasonable run, that's €1.67B. With down-back 2025 and €2B in

The Underneath

The rebound is two-deals. Still €200M. Q2 lost down €400M, Q2 cut 21% (H1 + 2% of 2025 and down 20% of the entire quarter's total. Q2 2026 is the first quarter since 2021 to end with fewer than 140 deals
